Great Britain has put her foot in it again. As always, she has over-stepped herself in a frantic effort to uphold what she regards ganda born of the white man's realization that the Negro is beginning to recognize Africa as his rightful heritage. Reading the newspapers and magazines today one notes that the press contains three times as many articles on Africa as it did a decade ago. That which interests us most is not the increase in the articles bearing on Africa, and things African, but the change in contents of these articles. A few years back most articles on Africa were of a humorous, ridiculing or pity-soliciting nature. They were articles which pointed out either the ridiculousness of native modes and customs or the need of christianity to enlighten the natives. But of recent years, newspaper articles on Africa contents of Negro Specialists in the several bureaus. Africa contain a different subject matter.

Africa contain a different subject matter.

Instead of humorously despicting natives and their customs and begging for a more abundant contribution to the missionary box, the tendency now is to point to Africa's large resources and the great opportunitie awaiting the white man there. Many go so far as to sor that it is the duty of the white world to go into these parts and develop it for themselves. Why this way interest in Africa? Who

The expression "So long" is at English provincialism which was introduced into the United States. J. Redding Ware in his "Passing of the English of the Victorian Era" speaks of the custom in England of adopting the words of foreigners resident there and Anglicizing them and mentions as an instance the expression "So long," which he believes originated in the Whitechaped district of London, being a corruption of the Jewish "selah," a phrase which spread all over Eugland.
